

WTO MC11: Inject fresh momentum for trade and development

8 DECEMBER 2017

In times of significant challenges for the world trading system and rising protectionism, companies worldwide are waiting impatiently for governments to show leadership and allow the World Trade Organisation to deliver. To give new impetus to the multilateral trading system, the undersigned organisations call upon the WTO members to:

1. Safeguard the WTO system: Ensure that it stays the guardian of the trade rulebook

The Dispute Settlement Understanding of the WTO is one of the most important pillars of the organisation since it ensures the enforcement of multilateral trade rules in an independent manner. We call on all Member States of the WTO to support the proper functioning of the system in order to preserve a rules-based trading system.

2. Progress on agriculture and fisheries subsidies: Support LDCs and fight hunger

In order to show that the WTO can continue to deliver tangible benefits, states should conclude the talks on agriculture (especially on trade-distorting support) and take a more ambitious approach to fisheries subsidies. This would also help least-developed countries (LDCs) fight hunger as per Goal 2 of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), where states agreed, amongst other things, to “correct and prevent trade restrictions and distortions in world agricultural markets”.

3. Show that WTO can deliver: Take account of new trade environment

Business works on tight timeframes, and has real difficulty engaging with an organisation which cannot deliver results in a reasonable time. This is particularly crucial for small businesses, who lack the resources to deal with the many barriers to trading across the world. Today, global value chains and digitalisation have created new trade realities requiring new multilateral governance. Therefore, we call on governments to start working on additional issues, preferably on the multilateral or, if not achievable, on a plurilateral basis. They should adopt an ambitious work programme on issues of crucial importance for business:

- Services: For many years, services have been a growing, and in many countries a dominant, part of the economy, yet the WTO has made little progress on disciplines since the Uruguay Round; the WTO should look again at launching meaningful negotiation in this area.
- E-commerce, digital trade and new technologies: New forms of global trade need to be better reflected in WTO trade rules.
- ‘Servicification’ of world trade: removing barriers for provision of cross-border services, including services which are incorporated in goods.
- Trade and sustainable development: many studies have shown that trade leads to economic growth which drives sustainable development.
- Investment and competition: Facilitating investment through focus on WTO cross-cutting and new issues.

We are convinced that by delivering on the above points, the WTO can show its determination and capacity to address the current and future challenges of world trade and provide the necessary multilateral authority and governance to do so in an effective and equitable manner.
